Dear Sir/Madam

I believe Ebay's proposal to force buyers and sellers to use Paypal exclusively is unfair and designed only to increase their own profits as they also own paypal.

I believe as an eBay user that I am entitled to pay for an item in any way I see fit (eg via bank deposit). I do not have a credit card, so I am unable to pay via paypal, so therefore I will be unable to use eBay. What right does eBay have to take away my right to use their service? This is only benefiting them as they will receive more profits, however eBay already receive fees from all sellers and this is just another way to charge people. If their reasoning is based purely on security why isn't ebay.com doing the same?

eBay should be treated no differently to shopping in a store. There i can choose to pay via credit card, cash, eftpos - my rights should not be diluted because a corporate conglomerate are wanting a bigger slice of their already very large pie!

Kind Regards,

SHARNA JONES
