

Roy, Lauren

Subject: Ebay exempt from tpa [SEC=UNCLASSIFIED]
Categories: SEC=UNCLASSIFIED
ACCC Classification: SEC=UNCLASSIFIED

EXCLUDED FROM

From: Ross Cole [mailto:PUBLIC REGISTER]

Sent: Wednesday, 7 May 2008 3:37 PM

To: Adjudication

Subject: Ebay exempt from tpa

Hello,

I wish to object to eBay's immunity to the trade practices act.

People Deserve The Right To Choose.

Giving one company monopoly will mean price hikes when every the hell they feel like it!t shouldn't take 10 days to transfer money into my paypal account.

eBay your own lawyers admit "eBay is an authorised representative, number 308318, of paypal for the purpose of promoting paypal and it is not acting as your agent"
Which says it all!! EBAY is all for paypal's best interest and not for US the customer, seeing as ebay is not our agent and shouldn't be telling, rather forcing us to do anything!!!!

I think we need to rename ebay and paypal to BP and Caltex or maybe coles and woolworths.

Ebay is only an auction house! We are sellers accessing the service like anyone, anywhere, in the real world.

If I walk into a modern and sophisticated retail outlet these days and buy something I'll have a range of payment options to choose from! Cash, Credit Card, store credit and Eftpos not just one of these methods.

If anyone gets the right to choose which payment method is accepted its the SELLER the goods belong to, not the owner of the premise their being sold in!!

I have been trading safely with the current methods available for approx 5 years.

Kind Regards

Ross Cole