I oppose approving Honeysuckle Health's right to operate in Australia as they are behind a healthcare system that has been proven time and time again to not bring long-term positive benefits to their consumers.

They say they bring 'competition.' Why should healthcare be a competition? This competition only benefits consumers in the short term and once other health care providers drop out of the market, then the ones left will be able to essentially control how much they charge and consumers will have no say as they will often be the only option left for them.

In Australia we can choose our own doctors, treatment plans and hospitals. In this system they propose, Honeysuckle Health will control your doctor, your treatment plan and cost spending.

You have no choice - they will give you a list of who they contract with.

Australia is a world class leader when it comes to healthcare. Do not let that change.

Yours sincerely,

Alfred Malaga
