My understanding is that the major supermarkets will charge the consumer a levy included in the purchase price for items that contain soft plastic packaging. I believe responsibility for soft plastics should be back on manufacturer's and the major supermarkets. We can't have another scheme that will ultimately collapse and Greenwich consumers into believing their waste is being dealt with in a sustainable manner. Ultimately I would like to see a large reduction in the amount of soft plastic used in food manufacturing in this country. We can do better as a society.
